

Kansas Natural Resource Council

Founded in 1981, the Kansas Natural Resource Council was the first environmental organization to focus exclusively on Kansas issues. A board of directors from across the state oversees KNRC policy.

KNRC speaks out to:

- Protect the quality and supplies of Kansas' water.
- Support sustainable family farming practices that respect and restore the land and the community.
- Ensure a competitive energy market where renewable resources and conservation can flourish.
- Reduce the exposure to hazardous and nuclear wastes.
- Promote responsible solid waste management focusing on waste reduction, recycling and reuse.
- Encourage environmentally sound industrial practices.

"Health is the capacity of the land for self-renewal.
 Conservation is our effort to understand and preserve that capacity."
 - Aldo Leopold

Kansas has a rich natural inheritance of land, wildlife, water and energy. Our well-being depends upon the wise use of these gifts, for they are the sources of our prosperity. Kansans can no longer afford to squander topsoil and fossil fuels or pollute water supplies.

That is why the Kansas Natural Resource Council searches for ways to balance demands with our available resources. Our goal is to build sustainable natural resource policies - to harvest our inheritance at a rate that assures an equal abundance of resources for our children.
